Navigation Anyplace Wild – Safety, Training, Pleasure

“Navigation Anyplace Wild” is a new generation "coffee table suitable" self study navigation training workbook for anyone who needs to navigate in the outdoors on foot, although it will also be tremendously useful for people in vehicles, horseback and all terrain vehicles as well.

“Finally I have in my hands a definitive guide to the art of navigation, with examples throughout. This is the book that many in the outdoor industry have been threatening to write for years.” Richard Behne – Mountain Sports Magazine

“Navigation Anyplace Wild” comprehensively covers the subject of navigation for beginners and advanced users with many practical outdoor tips, appropriate illustrations and concise text. It includes a set of ‘Test Your Knowledge’ questions at the end of each chapter and comes with a separate map for use with some of the exercises to make the experience real. Accompanied by a website where additional copies of the map and helpful navigational tools can be downloaded free of charge and additional tasks bought for further practice. A Face Book site is also available for discussions and coaching of any queries readers may have.

Topics covered include route planning, an introduction to direction, safety issues, navigational tools and skills as well as restricted visibility navigation. There is even a section on improvised navigation for those caught out in a survival situation. Although the emphasis is on basic navigational tools and methods, it also includes some extensive theory for more serious readers who want to know more. An extract of the book is available for download from the website.

A qualified Mountain Guide and Instructor, Andrew Friedemann, now resident in the UK, holds qualifications in South Africa and Australia as an Outdoor Recreation Instructor and has been teaching navigation since 1992. He is an instructor with the UK based National Navigation Awards Scheme (NNAS). Further details about the author and reviews of the book are available from the website at www.navigationsskills.com
